Log of Sound Tapes

The original Log is in Sound Lab

TAPE LOG

J. G. Groth

1984 — 1989

These recordings were made specifically for a project on red crossbills (Loxia curvirostra). The idiosyncratic notations in this log were developed to accelerate the process of translating taped material into a hard copy transcription.

Tape counter numbers are given in the left-hand sides of pages. All cassette tapes were transcribed, analyzed, and counted using Sony TCM5000 recorders. Reel-to-reel tapes were recorded on Uher 4000 series recorders. For playback in the future, these numbers will vary depending upon the particular machine used.

Sonograms were made from material at various segments of the tapes, and these are shown (usually on the right side of the page) in circled numerals.

Numbers used in the textual part of the transcription usually refer to "tape numbers" of individual red crossbills used in the project. See Groth, UCPZ vol. 127, for a listing of these numbers cross-referenced to the catalog numbers of voucher specimens.

Particular attention was given to flight calls of crossbills. For example, the phrase "542 good" indicates a good series of calls from bird 542. The notation "wild birds" always indicates recordings of crossbills. Text in parentheses are direct quotes made during the original recording.

Additional field notes, and recordings of the vocalizations of other species, are included on the tapes. Shorthand indications for noteworthy observations are given.
